THE TRIBUNE,

NEW-YORK, FRIDAY MORNING, JULY 30

SANCTITY OF THE LAW .- The heart of every right-minded can must tremble with apprehension at the fearful outrages mor. Law, Justice and Public Order which are bursting forth intervals in various sections of the Country. They evince to the most terrible results. The bloodiest events which have stained the page of history, and rendered the actors in them infimously immortal, have had their rost in this same spirit of insubordination and of disregard for the solemn requisitions of the acknowledged and sanctioned Law of the land. The to receive for the specific crime they have committed not equal to their deserts for intended villanies; they thereresolve to take these men from the hands of Law and inflict upon them such punishment as they think they may deserve. Several hundred accordingly assemble, burst open the prison doors, closed by the arm of the Law, drag forth their wretched victims, and, amid forms and observances which can only be regarded as the most open and blasphemeus mockeries of Law and religion, hang them until they are dead, and then disperse quietly to their houses. Here is nothing sudden, nothing violent, nothing done without forethought; the whole has been long and carefully premeditated,

Now if this be not a wilful, deliberate Murder, if those who shared as principals in the transaction ought not to be tried and hung as murderers, we would ask the object of having any laws at all. The purpose of Law is to protect all the member of Society from violence and wrong. The basest and most despised as well as the highest and most honored members of the community may claim protection from its sanction. It regards the person of no man; its sole object is to realize and make practically efficient in Society the principles of justice; to shield every human being who comes beeath its sway from any violation of his rights, whether by one or a thousand of those by whom he is surrounded. This immunity it guarantees to every one, and in return it exacts from him that obedience which, for his safety, it impos on others. Its claims are enforced by the whole power of Society; all men are leagued together and pledged to each other and to that God, in whose bosom all Law dwells, that its sanctions are maintained inviolate, and to opary and despoil it of its divinity. If then the actors in this do ad tragedy be not held strictly accountable to that Law which declares the life of man to be sacred and promises to of justice prove recreant to their high trust and abandon the privileges and iscurs the responsibilities of civilized society A that the Law, wherever established, is the Supreme Power of the land. No man or body of men has any right to deny its authority, to asnul its penalty, or in any way to interfere with its onward course. While it remains unchanged it reigns supreme; it is itself the sole instrument of justice acknowledged by the State, and whatever it decides it is trea. son to Society not to uphold and enforce. It has moreover its own Executive organs, and in their hands alone can it rest. It is high sacrilege for another to grasp the prerogative of the Minister of Justice; the sword which in the hand of the latter is consecrated to holy uses and is clothed with high authority becomes, in the possession of another, the weapon of a murderer.

But apart from these considerations, what are the causes of the spirit which gives birth to these outrages upon social order, what is its tendency, and in what direction are we to look for a remedy. These are questions of most momentous interest and of the highest practical importance; they deserve the scrious consideration of every good citizen, for the evil to which they relate is one of the highest magnitude and of growing enormity. There can be little doubt that at the foundation of the causes which give rise to this spirit is the relaxation which is becoming frequent in the applications of returnal Law. It is very generally regarded as a hrad misfortime that a hardened villain should pay the full penalty of his crimes and the ingenuity of shrewd minds is taxed to devise excuses for the enormities of guilty wretches; pleas of insumty are entertained on ground often culpably slight and insufficient, alleged conscientious scruples are allowed to destroy the binding force of oaths and the sacred prerogative of extending mercy is too often prostituted to base and unhallowed purposes. All these influences combine to infuse into the public mind a feeling of unsatisfied justice; it may be innocent at first in the breasts of those whose concern really arises from love of virtue and reverence for strict intearity, but it soon engenders a sentiment of contempt for in-

THE EAGLE COOKING STOVE.

This newly invented Cooking Stove, adapted to the use of Coal or Wood is far superior to any other now in use. The overall being own views of justice and propriety. Whenever its provisions are at variance with these, they are ready to trample upon its authority and with unsanctified hands seize upon the work which it is its prerogative to perform.

The tendency of all this is sufficiently obvious. It is to break down all the barriers which guard the inalienable rights of men—to destroy the stately fabric of society which the might and wisdom of ages have erected, and to give to the strongest the right of absolute and undisputed rule.—Law, thus degraded and desecrated, withdraws her shield of protection from those who despise her power and reject her authority; confusion and trembling insecurity take the place of calm reliance on a high protecting power, and the state of society is no better than that of savage, lawless barbarity.—This is the condition to which sach outrages as those which are becoming of frequent occurrence continually tend: there be fully felt and all its natural consequences be fairly evolved; but the evil power is there, and until it be removed society is in an unhealthy state-bearing within itself the

It is impossible to indicate definitely the remedies which would be efficient to produce a better and less dangerous spirit. They are most certainly not to be found in standing cent and imposing. This would but arouse into deeper a more fearful agitation the passions which threaten hurt society; and although they might be overpowered and re-strained for a space, they would not die, but in course of time burst forth with redoubled fury and a thousand-fold more fatal violence. A reformation in the Criminal I aw, so that equisite in any attempt to destroy the disposition for these disgraceful scenes. A determination in the public mind strictly ished, and to allow no false philanthrosy to interfere with the requirements of justice, must also be cherished and renmations and this feeling the ends of justice may be infalcerned in these riotous proceedings be visited with the sw the law or to claim immunity for a violation, under any c
